Nursing Stations

Community Health Nurses (CHNs) work in an expanded scope of practice to provide primary care, public health, health promotion and emergency care for First Nations individuals, families and communities, including after hours on-call care. Post Secondary training and education allows CHNs to obtain a designated Remote Certification, RN(c) through CRNBC. The FNHA currently has eight Nursing Stations staffed by two to four CHNs in locations ranging from coastal to northern communities. Nursing stations are comprised of full time, part time and casual positions.

Current Locations Include:

Anahim Lake, Fort Ware, Tsay Keh Dene, Hartley Bay, Port Simpson, Kitkatla, Klemtu, and Telegraph Creek.

Health Centres

Health Centre CHN's provide a comprehensive range of nursing services to First Nation communities. Their practice is grounded in health promotion and disease prevention and aims to build the capacity of individual, family, and community wellness. Health centre CHN's work in partnership with community in order to develop and implement relevant, culturally centered interventions providing services in clinic, home, and community settings. CHNs in this setting are not on-call nor provide emergency services.

Current Locations include:

Lytton, Lillooet, Chase, Alexis Creek, Fort St. John, Bella Coola, Moricetown, Seton Lake, Quesnel, and Gitanyow.
