In British Columbia (BC), naloxone (an opioid antagonist) must be prescribed for a specific person by a physician or nurse practitioner. Yet, a considerable proportion of those at risk of opioid overdose have little to no contact with primary health care services due to perceived barriers like stigma. Community organizations with established relationships with people who use illicit opioids or those prescribed opioids (including methadone) are an integral component of increasing access to naloxone and reducing harms from opioid overdose in BC. We acknowledge that some challenges may arise when implementing a THN program at community-based organizations without affiliated medical staff. However, sites implementing the THN program must operate in the present policy environment as per federal, provincial and medical professional regulatory bodies.

A THN collaborative team consists of a site coordinator and one or more educators, prescribers and dispensers. Due to diverse environments across the province, sites can adapt to best serve their clients. An individual may take on multiple roles, or the roles may be filled by staff affiliated with different organizations. The educator will train participants using the curriculum developed by the BC Harm Reduction (HR) Program (found on www.towardtheheart.com/naloxone) and evaluate the participants’ knowledge. The prescriber must be confident that the participant has the appropriate knowledge before prescribing naloxone; however, having reviewed the training curriculum and assessment the prescriber can delegate the training to the educator.

While teams may take different forms, all tasks and deliverables listed in the following table must be completed.

You may contact your Health Authority’s Harm Reduction Coordinator (see table below) or the BC HR Program (phone 604.707.2400/email outreach@towardtheheart.com) to discuss your plan and program model.
